About Bolide Technology Group

Bolide Technology Group

Bolide Technology Group has been a leading manufacture for advanced CCTV, security and covert surveillance equipment for many years. Security installers, detectives, government agencies and law enforcement groups have welcomed our products worldwide.

For the past few years, our factories, engineers and R&D teams have been involved in the extensive development, designing and manufacturing of the latest technology for the CCTV and other surveillance equipment. Our teams are constantly updating all our products to upgrade their technology to make sure that all our products are always on top of the market.

Our products have been well known by the market, not only because of their unique design, but also the fine quality. Our products have been introduced on CNBC, KTNV, 20/20 and other well-known TV shows for the special introduction of the best security and surveillance equipment in the current market. Philadelphia Daily News has a full-page article that introduces our company and the products that we provide. As a part of our service, our teams are also able to customize and design the system for specialized needs, and provides consultation and seminars on the latest technology and personnel training on all our products.

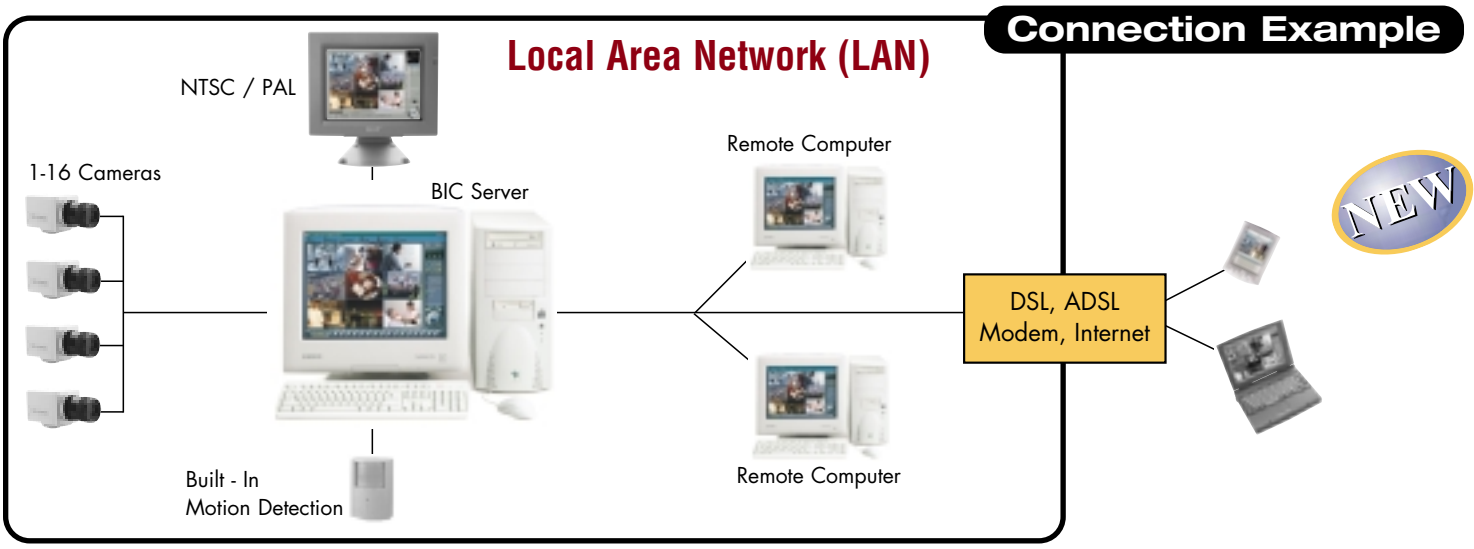
What is a Digital Recorder or commonly called a DVR?

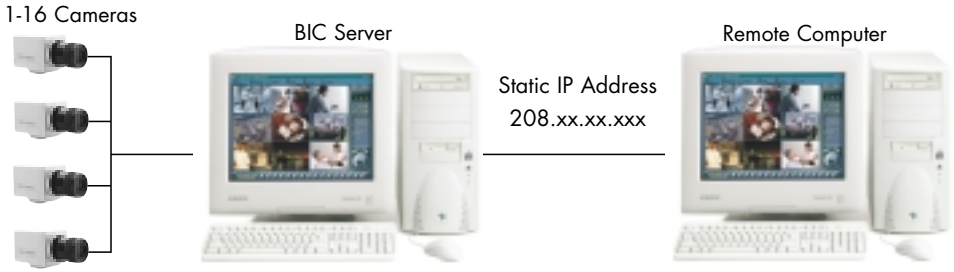
A DVR is just as it sounds, a device that digitally records video on a computer hard drive. DVRs have become today's choice for recording surveillance equipment. Under the old analog systems, you would need multiple devices to do all the functions that a single DVR can do. For example, with four cameras you would need a quad processor, video motion detector, joystick (for Pan/Tilt/Zoom cameras), time lapse VCR, and a device to allow remote viewing. Even with all those features you still would not come close to all the features a DVR has to offer.

A DVR will do all the above-mentioned functions with less equipment and greater ease at a fraction of the cost. Our DVRs have a user-friendly interface that allows you to just point-and-click. Replay recorded data and skip to the specific date you want to view without having to go through the entire recording like a conventional VCR. We also offer a feature that allows you to look for motion on recorded video. DVRs also allow you to remotely view live images or recorded images through a phone line, LAN, or DSL. Whether you are installing a new surveillance system, or upgrading an existing analog system, a DVR is the best choice for your security.



What you need to setup a DVR system?

A Standard Phone Line or DSL service from your local ISP. Whether you have a Dynamic IP Address or a Static IP Address with extra monthly extra fees, our system can connect your server anywhere at anytime.



What is Static IP Address?
An add-on service for your DSL allows you to connect your computer directly through the Internet with monthly charges.

What is Dynamic IP Address?
A standard service comes with your DSL service. Without a static IP address, other DVR systems will not allow you to connect to your server, but Bolide has the solution for you.

Security Monitor Controller

This is another remote surveillance device that can work with a standard phone line and without any PC connection. The SMC can connect up to four cameras and remotely review the camera video images through a standard phone line anywhere in the world. If there is a computer at the reviewers side, the video image will be reviewed by installing the program in the computer. If there is no computer at the reviewers side, just simply connect another SMC to any TV or monitor, the video image can be easily reviewed too. This equipment also has a one-channel two way audio, remote and local PTZ camera control and other advanced features. It also works with any VCR to record video images at either the camera or the reviewers side.

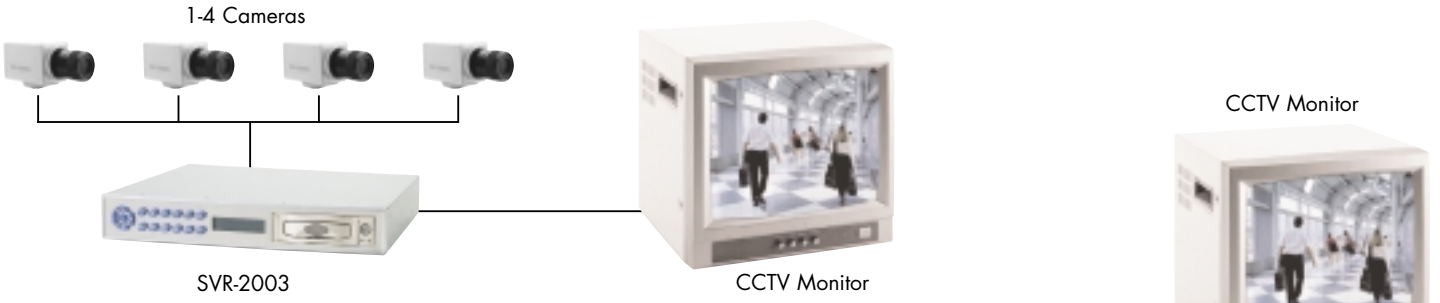
Stand-alone DVR System

The SVR-2003 is a stand-alone, embedded design (this means it is a non-PC-based) 4-channel digital recorder. An embedded system is less likely to lock up, compared to a PC based system. This system works just like a VCR, but with a built in 4-channel multiplex system. The button controls and digitizing features provide intuitive operation with powerful digital functions. Key features include real-time and time-lapse recording, alarm detecting and triggering with external sensors, 4-channel Multiplex system, customizable long term archives, and instantaneous retrieval and replay. Its removable hard drive design allows user to customize needed recording capacity, to have extra space, and to replay recorded video on a monitor easily. The SVR-2003 is the most affordable digital recorder for the VCR replacement. It is easy to use and no special training is needed.

- High quality, digital video/audio storage to IDE hard drive
- VCR-like intuitive buttons, easy to operate
- Password protected setup
- Alerts for full hard drive or pre-set for overwriting
- 4-channel multiplexing
- With a 30GB hard drive for time-lapse recording (0.1fps), records up to 1380 hrs at standard quality or 2080 hrs at economy quality
- With a 30GB hard drive for real time recording, records about 120 hrs at standard quality or 185 hrs at economy quality

Catalog No: SVR-2003 Retail: $1,399.95 Our price: $999.95



For a traditional 4-camera Security System, you need a quad processor to split the 4 camera images to fit on one screen. For video recording, you need to hook up a VCR in order to record. The SVR-2001, its has a built-in 4 channel multiplex system and alarm detecting and triggering with external sensor. The SVR-2001 is the most affordable digital recorder for the VCR and Quad processor replacement.

Digital Video Recording System

What is Network Camera?

Bolide's Network cameras are intenet-addressable, high-resolution cameras that are used for surveillance, remote monitoring and many other applications using a standard web browser.

How do they work?

Our Network camera uses its own IP address and standard network protocols such as TCP/IP to connect directly via DSL, ADSL, modem or wireless network adapter. There is no need for a connection to a PC, so it is easy to install, more flexible, and considerably more cost efective than a PC attached camera. Note that many web cameras, Internet cameras, etc. claim that they are network cameras, but are actually PC cameras. They are connected to a PC via USB or Firewire and require PC for the connection to a network.

Flexibility: Place a Bolide Network camera anywhere via modem, DSL, or wireless adapter. A PC-attached camera needs to be within 10' of the PC

Quality: Bolide Network Cameras provide high quality images using the common Motion-Jpeg format, whereas PC-attached often use poor quality components and proprietary streaming tecniques

Installation: Set the IP address of a Bolide Network camera and you are up and running, where-as a PC attached Web camera requires the often complicated installation of computer drivers and software

Ease of use: Bolide Network Cameras enable you to adminis-ter and view live images using a standard Web browser, versus the specific software required by most PC attached cameras

Connectivity: With the latest DDNS function, Bolide Network successfully fulfills the needs of utilizing the Dynamic IP address from the group of people using DSL/ADSL/XDSL Internet serv-ice who lack the static IP address

High Resolution Network Camera

This network camera, featuring the built-in SONY SuperHAD CCD sensor and delivers state-of-the-art image quality. With the latest DDNS (Dynamic Domain Name Server) function, Bolide's network camera sucessfully fulfills the needs of utilizing the Dynamic IP address from the groups of people using DSL/ADSL/XDSL Internet service who lack the static IP address. Other advanced features include built-in motion detection, programmable event settings, pre-post alarm and auto DC iris lens support.

- Remote Surveillance via network
- Web server built-in
- 30/25 frames per second live video
- Motion detection built-in
- High resolution 704 x 480, 0.5 lux (SONY SuperHAD CCD sensor)

Digital Call Filter

With this Digital Call Filter, you will only receive phone calls from people you want to speak with. Here's how it works. You set a four-digit code that you give to anyone you want to. When someone calls your phone, they have a few seconds to correctly enter the code. If they enter the correct code, your Digital Call Filter rings and you answer to begin your conversation. If the caller enters the wrong code or doesn't enter any code, the Digital Call Filter prompts the caller up to three times to enter the code and after the third prompt, the Digital Call Filter then automatically HANGS UP...without your phone EVER RINGING. You won't even know anyone called! Outbound calls are not affected. You can easily change the code at any time, or turn the Call Filter off and use your phone in the normal fashion. What a great security and privacy device! Comes ready to use with lithium battery installed.

Wrong Number Generator

This unique device has the potential to drive the target nuts, as well as causing a substantial amount of actual inconvenience. What it does is very simple though. It causes calls made from the target phones to reach wrong numbers! Think about how absolutely maddening and frustrating that would be if it were to happen to your phone, and you'll begin to appreciate the devastating effect that this device can have. Just to toy with their fury and confusion even more, it's engineered to allow about 25% of the calls dialed to go through correctly. (Note: calls to 911 will always go through.)

Video Motion Detector

This video motion sensor is the perfect addition to your security system. Instead of using bulky PIRs and wiring, it will simply connect between the monitor and VCR. There are four adjustable field sensors that will allow one to place them on the most important areas on the monitor screen. Once the areas on the screen have movement, the unit will send a signal to any event VCR and will trigger the VCR to start recording. The VRC will only record when the motion occurs and stop when motion stops. This unit gives you more control than do ordinary motion sensors in a more economical and convenient package.

Ultraviolet Thief Detection Powder

Ultraviolet Thief Detection Powder is designed for theft and the identification of stolen or altered items. For example, an article can be marked so that it is invisible to the eye, but under ultraviolet light the item and anyone who touched it can be identified. The powder, once touched, remains on fingers and hands, invisible except under UV light. Tampering, theft, substitution, etc., can be revealed as well as evidence against a suspect provided. Fluorescence is the phenomenon by which certain materials absorb ultraviolet energy and reemits this invisible radiation in the form of visible colored light. Fluorescence occurs only while the material is being activated by the UV rays. Once the source of the UV radiation is removed, the fluorescent glow ceases. The best fluorescent responses occur in darkness or under low-level lighting conditions. This fluorescent tracer powder readily transfers to the fingers and hands when touched, leaving the subject "glowing" when put under UV inspection. Powder is recommended for indoor use; paste can be applied to locks, fire alarm boxes, off-limits doorknobs, computer keyboards, etc, the applications are unlimited. Non-toxic. 2 oz container. Recommended for use with the Mini Ultraviolet Lamp.

Visible Stain Thief Detection Powder

Depending upon your particular situation, visible stain detection may be preferable to ultraviolet detection in some cases. Visible stain thief detection powder is used to trap thieves by applying to objects likely to be stolen. After the protected item comes in contact with the skin, the body's amino acids react with the powder, creating a highly visible purple stain, which can last up to several days. Note: the stains may discolor the marked object. Non-toxic. 2 oz. container.

Common Terms for CCTV

A.L.C (Automatic Level Control)----------
This function allows the auto iris circuitry to either take bright spots more into consideration (peak), bringing out detail in bright areas or less into consideration (average) bringing out detail in shadows. In another words, make the image clearer under different light conditions. This function is built in most of our cameras. It is either built-in ALC or manually switches on.

Alarm Input----------
It is mostly to be used with event VCR to start and stop the recording when the alarm is triggered. With alarm input function, it allows you to save your tape. The normal household VCR does not have this function; however, our Event VCR and Time Lapse VCR has this function.

Automatic Gain Control (AGC)----------
An electronic circuit that automatically adjusts the gain of a signal as a function of its input or other specified parameter. For example, if the video signal is dark, it will attempt to increase the gain to bring the brightness up to a normal level.

Auto-Iris lens----------
The automatic iris lens (mechanical diaphragm) that adjusts automatically to allow a specific amout of light to be passed to the image sensor. When there is too much light, the iris lens will close to reduce the amount of light to get in. On the other hand, when there is little light, the iris lens will open to allow more light to get in. Auto iris lens are usually used in black where light levels vary.

B.L.C. (Back Light Compensation)----------
Electronically compensates for high background lighting, giving detail to objects which normally would be silhouetted.

BNC----------
Commonly use the CCTV industry. The RCA connector is the most commonly used video connector for plug and play CCTV. It is called a universal connector. Most of our cameras have RCA connectors for your convenience.

CCD (Charged Coupled Device)----------
This is a solid-state semiconductor-imaging device often referred to as an integrated circuit, chip or "imager". Solid-state cameras are often referred to as CCD cameras.

CCTV----------
It is the abbreviation for Closed Circuit Television, which is a private or closed television system.

Electronic Iris (E.I.) Shutter----------
Electronic Iris shuttering is the ability of the camera to compensate for moderate light changes in indoor applications without the use of auto iris lenses. All of our cameras have this function.

Horizontal Resolution----------
The maximum number of individual picture of elements that can be distinguished in a single scanning line. Most of our B/W cameras have 420 horizontal lines resolution, and Color cameras have 380 lines resolution.

Infrared (IR)----------
A lights which the frequencies lower than visible lights that the CCD camera can use it for light source, but can not be seen by human eye. It is great when you need to monitoring a totally darkness area.

Lux----------
A unit measuring the intensity of light. Full Daylight is about 10,000 lux whereas full moon light is about 0.1 lux. Most of our B/W cameras need only 0.01 lux, and Color Cameras need only 0.5 lux.

Multiplexer----------
The multiplexer is a video multiplexer that provides viewing and recording capabilities from as many as 16 channels of video. The multiplexer provides exceptional picture quality in live and play back modes. It also offers dramatic cost and space savings over traditional means of viewing and recording multiple channels of video from several camera sources.

Microwave----------
A very efficient transmission band used for sending video signal or audio signal VIA wireless. Typical microwave video links use the following frequencies: 900MHz, 1.2 GHz and 2.4 GHz.

PTZ----------
PTZ stands for Pan, Tilt and Zoom. A camera comes with this function allows the camera to move side-to-side, up and down tilting and zoom. It is great for monitoring a big area. Most of our PTZ cameras have an RS 485 receiver built-in and is compatible with all major protocols.

Quad Processor----------
Quad processor allows viewing up to four cameras simultaneously on one screen. It also allows the VCR to record all cameras at the same time. With a Quad processor, you do not need a camera switcher to change between camera views. The main advantage of quad processor is while you view one camera, the others will not be lost.

White Balance----------
The white balance function is for color cameras only. It helps to correct different color temperature because different lighting sources provide different color temperatures. With the white balance features, the camera adjusts the color processing to bring the color temperature to a fixed level.

Vari-focal Lens----------
A lens with a variable focal length. It may be used as a wide angle, standard, or telephoto lens. With the vari-focal lens, you can change the focal length to zoom in or zoom out. Many different types are available including both manual and motorized versions.

PART 15 FCC APPROVED - under Part 15 of the FCC regulations, the transmitter in this equipment does not require any license for operation. There are limitations on usage, over-hearing or recording of private conversations.

ARS-this equipment operates on Amateur Radio Service frequencies and requires a license for legal operations. There are no restrictions on the sale of this equipment, however Bolide Technology Group urges our users to become familiar with and observe all laws and regulations governing ARS licensing and the operations of ARS equipment.
